Taking requests for new technology

Many staff members get excited to have the newest technology to assist with patient care and to make their dental lives easier. I'm a firm believer that it's not enough to just ask for it — you need to do your homework when it comes this. While this message is applicable to all dental professionals, click here for my step-by-step advice to hygienists when they want to approach their employers. It all begins with education!

But I thought she was going to do it

Many dentists support cross-training for their office, sometimes at the cost of increasing drama among team members. For instance, who do you go to when there's holes in the hygiene or doctor's schedules — who is to work diligently to fill these? Who's responsible for insurance claims that are over 60 days old? When each party knows his or her job duties for daily, weekly and monthly tasks, there is greater efficiency and greater accountability overall.
